DEOPAHAR

The Hill of the Gods, Golaghat, Assam

Situated within the Deopani Reserve Forest, spread over 133 hectares along the ASEAN Highway-1, Deopahar houses the remains of a 10th–11th century stone temple. Though partly damaged, possibly during the 1897 earthquake, the site still showcases its creators' remarkable skill.

The stones of Deopahar are adorned with carvings of Shiva, Lakshmi-Narayana, apsaras, dwarapalas, and scenes from the Ramayana and Mahabharata, offering insight into Assam's early temple art that unites Aryan and indigenous traditions.

Rising quietly from the lush greenery of Numaligarh in Assam's Golaghat district, Deopahar —meaning Hill of the Gods—is one of Upper Assam's most captivating archaeological and natural heritage sites. Also known as Deoparbat or Devparvat, this ancient hill blends faith, artistry, and nature in perfect harmony.

Beyond its historical beauty, Deopahar thrives as a living forest sanctuary, forming an important elephant corridor between Kaziranga and Karbi Anglong. Its lush biodiversity includes orchids, ferns, hoolock gibbons, and countless bird species.

Located about 255 km from Guwahati and only a few kilometres from Numaligarh, Deopahar is a serene escape for heritage and nature lovers alike.
